

Fish Story

The story of a curious goldfish

By Aidan

One day, George the goldfish was sitting in his fish tank, when he suddenly thought about the outside world.

He had been sitting in this fish tank for years, but had never had this thought. He wondered about what was out there, all the food, all the friends, all the adventures he could have.

He saw a glass of water next to his tank, if he could just reach the glass, he could escape outside the window and into the ocean down below!

He tries to reach the glass but he can't, so he thinks of an idea, 'If I can find an object to use to climb out, I'll be free!'

He looked around his tank for an object to use to get out, but he couldn't find any. Just when he thought all hope was lost, he eyes a wooden plank in the corner of the tank behind some of the decorations the owner had set up. He had no idea when it had got there or how long it had been there for. He quickly uses all his might to try and place it against the side of the tank, which works.

George climbs up the plank trying to keep his gills under water for as long as possible, though he can only make it half way up. He's gonna need a boost. He sees the tank cleaner emitting bubbles from the bottom of the tank. It was perfect.

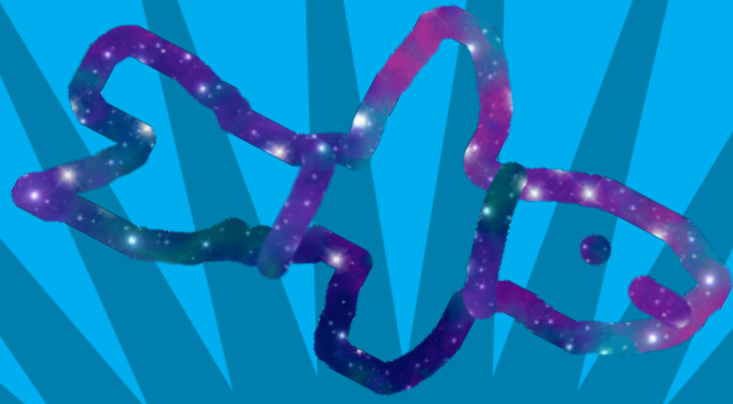

It works! He's free! It launches him into the air! Far above the fish tank. Although, he has to think about one more thing, landing in the glass of water perfectly. He flips through the air, in a way he thinks is majestic, but really is just like a snake, flying in the air. He flies towards the ground as quick as lightning and closes his eyes just before he feels the cold splash of the water. He made it.
